

'KAYO ANG BOSS KO'

Aquino also thanks the people, 'my true strength'

By GIC Calasagosa Jr.

"YOU ARE THE BOSS," THE COUNTRY'S now most powerful man declared yesterday in Filipino ("Kayo ang boss ko"), addressing the people who, he said, echoing his constant campaign remark, were his "true strength."

Bereng Aquino III's inauguration ceremony in the Philippines' 15th President under his father's name but in a modernizing form, applauded by an adoring crowd estimated by police at 500,000. He spoke loudly but humbly, pointing all the right buttons in a 20-minute inaugural address delivered calmly in Filipino.

He promised to lead by example in fighting corruption and living up to the legacy of his famous parents, Sen Benigno Aquino Jr. and President Corason Aquino, he said he was willing to forego personal luxuries but not the abuses committed against the people.

It was a speech without the usual abstract platitudes but replete with man-declaring.

He directed Lito de Lima, his justice secretary, to deliver "fair and complete justice to all," and Francisco Abalos, his agriculture secretary, to do away with middlemen and, in the process, stamp out "opportunities for corruption."

"No more wang-wang," Mr. Aquino said, referring to the blaring horns that announce the passing of vehicles bearing passengers making with self-importance.

"Finally, the dinner starts to become a reality. To those among you who are still undecided about sharing the common burden I have only one question: Are you going to quit now that we have won?" he said.

Aquino, Arroyo convoy gets in way of Binay's e-jeep

By Norman Bordadora

DAPPER IN A CRISP BARONG TAGALOG, Vice President Jejomar Binay rode yesterday too what he called the most chapter of his life in a hairy-powered jeepney to show his concern for the common man.

Two lead. Five four-wheeling SUVs carrying the outgoing and incoming Presidents intruded into Binay's programmed scenic route. With sirens blaring, the presidential motorcade beat Binay's party convoy of two electric jeeps in the inauguration at Quirino Grandstand.

"It's a breach of protocol," said Manuel Quinsac III, the inaugural spokesperson and the event's national adviser.

Binay was supposed to walk on stage along with the other guests for President Aquino.

"It was just a mix-up. You know it happens," Binay later told reporters. "This was no issue. But there is no break in protocol. You really can't control how fast a conveyance can get," he said, downplaying an obvious faux pas.

They came to celebrate democracy

By Philip C. Tabaza and Cathy C. Yaman

A STREET VENDOR SPILLED OUT WHAT he thought was his inaugural speech from that of his predecessor, Gloria Macapagal-Arroyo, in 2004.

"There are more people here. It feels different now. It's far from before, when it wasn't the people's will. People didn't like her," Linda Gallego, 55, said yesterday.

Gallego, a resident of Manila, Manila, said she had wanted to witness the new President's inaugural and listen to what he had to say. She went to Rinal Park and watched the inaugural program at Quirino Grandstand by herself.

Despite inclement skies, an estimated crowd of more than 500,000, including 4,000 VIPs, packed the site.

"I just could not stay away from this celebration of democracy," said Tinora Lasso President and Nobel Peace Prize Laureate Jose Ramos Horta, who led more than 300 foreign dignitaries to the inauguration.

A line of people dressed in yellow gathered to witness the one-and-a-half-hour ceremony that was peppered with songs and other musical numbers before Supreme Court Associate Justice Cecilia Corason-Morales administered the oath of office to Mr. Aquino and Vice President Jejomar Binay at around noon.

GMA loses immunity from suit

By Christian V. Espinosa Jr. and GIC Calasagosa Jr.

GLORIA MACAPAGAL-ARROYO YESTERDAY lost her immunity from suit as president for more than nine years and may be summoned to respond to charges of corruption during her administration, according to Justice Secretary Lito de Lima.

"The presidential immunity stops the moment a sitting president leaves his or her office. That's under the Constitution," De Lima said, pointing clearly at her taking her oath of office in Manila yesterday.

Arroyo, who took her oath as Pampanga representative hours after her successor, President Benigno Aquino III, was sworn into office yesterday, could end up being the main target of a "truth commission" that will investigate the "Hello Garci" election scandal, lend her name, the National Broadband Network deal with ZTE Corp. and other high-profile corruption cases during her rule.

In his inaugural address at the Quirino Grandstand in Manila yesterday, Mr. Aquino reiterated his plan to open up the commission, to be headed by retired Chief Justice Renato Corona Jr., in order Booting and thunderous applause at seeing her go from the crowd at Arroyo left the park. They seemed ecstatic to see the last of her as president.

High hopes for immediate end to human rights abuse

THIS IS A REFERENCE TO THE REPORT that one of the "strongest" of the tropical islands, to wit, the Philippines, has a general election on 12/15/00. There is general hope on the Philippine peninsula to 1999, the end of the two great scourges of Philippine democracy: Imperialism and corruption. It is hoped that the election will be a landmark in the history of the Philippines, and that it will be a landmark in the history of the world. Gov signs open-pit mining ban, reveals pressure from Danding

GENERAL SANTOS CITY—THE GOVERNOR OF South Cotabato has signed a ban on open-pit mining in the province, saying the defiled half-parry hees, businessman Eduardo "Danding" Cojuangco Jr., be doing so.

Gov. Arsenio Francisco signed the province's first environmental order banning open-pit mining on Monday in two days before he returns abroad.

Francisco refused to succumb to pressure not to sign the law, saying those who had organized him not to sign the law was Cojuangco's, according to Francisco, who is a member of the National People's Party (NPP) founded by Cojuangco.

Francisco said instead of bowing to Cojuangco's request, he would have the operations of illegal mining gold mines in the province.

Cojuangco's son, Miguel Corp. (MCC) plans to operate an open-pit gold mine in Benguet in La Osa (Laba) town.

Francisco said he does not want to protect the environment and the interest of the people of South Cotabato since ahead of his loyalty to the NPP.

High court urged to approve special rules for IPR cases

By Abigail L. Lim

THE INTELLECTUAL PROPERTY CODE is asking the Supreme Court to approve special rules that will expedite the processing of intellectual property cases.

This move is expected to boost the entry of innovations into the country.

IP Philippines' director general

Benito Alcantara said the Intellectual Property Code has been passed in all portions of the high-level government's deliberations.

"We're very optimistic that it will be promulgated in the near future," he said. "We will be able to start the implementation of the law."

The Special Rules on IPR Litigation, drafted and submitted to then Chief Justice Renato Corona last year, were approved by the Supreme Court in June.

Alcantara said the law will help protect the country's intellectual property and ensure that the country's innovation is protected.

"We don't know yet what these countries and the law will do, but it's necessary," he said. "We will be able to start the implementation of the law."

Breads of the world

Great potato remake for a favorite staple

A POPULAR BAKERY IN DOWNTOWN MANILA recently introduced four exciting new products that became an instant hit with its customers.

Liberty Foodmart, a landmark in one of the busiest and most culturally diverse parts of Manila is famous for its breads. Inspired by the world tradition of "baking bread" which means sharing a meal with friends and loved ones, Liberty Foodmart believed that offering these international favorites is its way of opening its doors to its neighbors from different countries.

But the breads were given a new twist that enhanced their desirable qualities—by adding US dehydrated potato flakes to the bread formulation. The result is breads with outstanding taste, aroma, mouth feel and texture. These are the US Potato Cassava, US Potato French Bread, US Potato Cheese Ensaïmada, and US Potato Asian Bread.

What really made the big difference to the new breads was the use of US dehydrated potatoes. They're made these breads better but the addition of the US dehydrated potatoes resulted in a noticeable improvement. For example, the Cassava, a popular Filipino white bread, traditionally has a crisp crust and usually a dense or open textured crumb. Making it with US dehydrated potatoes resulted in a nicely crisp top but a slightly more crumbly interior which is great for making toasted sandwiches called paninis, or for dipping in olive oil and herbs as when served.

Similarly the US Potato French Bread, usually characterized by a hearty crust and dry crumb inside, showed great crusting qualities. The crust was perfectly crisp without being tough, and the crumb remained crisp but moist enough to give a nice biting experience.

The US Potato Cheese Ensaïmada, a sweet Spanish bread became richer and softer but had enough body while the US Potato Asian Bread was deliciously savory with great texture and aroma.

Like many bakers the world over, Liberty Foodmart has discovered the wonderful benefits of using US dehydrated potatoes. Incorporating US dehydrated potatoes in baking applications has been found to greatly improve texture and softness, make breads stay moist and fresh longer on the shelf, and impart a delicious flavor and aroma.

Taste the delicious difference in US Potato Cassava, US Potato French Bread, US Potato Cheese Ensaïmada, and US Potato Asian Bread at Liberty Foodmart branches in Tayman and in Tondo, Manila.

Where is Filipino food in the US marketplace?

If there is any secret ingredient to winning over the Americans, it has to be food

By Dennis Clemente
 Contributor

NEW YORK—AT A FILIPINO restaurant bar, showing a recent Manny Pacquiao fight, a group of young Filipino-Americans, wearing Pacquiao and Philippine-inspired shirts, stood up when the Philippine national anthem came on, while the first-generation Filipino immigrants sat immobilized in their chairs. While the gesture is admirable and even patriotic, it clearly showed one generation's expressiveness over another's nonchalance.

Filipino-Americans (especially second-generation Filipinos) can be patriotic to Philippines-born Filipinos (especially first-generation Filipinos, the young-old up, upon arrival in the States). This makes it a point to express themselves when given the chance, even if they may be inward-looking Americans first and Filipinos second.

First-generation Filipinos who emigrated here in their adulthood, on the other hand, have a more realistic view, an outward-looking perspective that makes them more curious of the world (here and Filipinos) around. What does it mean to be Filipino there? Should we be satisfied with the label, Global Pinoy, for lack of any particular distinction?

From what I see, though, more and more Filipino-Americans are indulging what is called retro-spectrations—the balance of lifestyle-experiences with their own culture of heritage-to-complex their identity.

No reservations

Let's look back at the "7th Generation: Philippines" episode, shown recently 2009 on the Travel Channel when young Filipino-American Superman Debra of Can't Beamed gave this revealing statement: "I am neither entirely American, nor entirely Filipino, but an Old of new in the middle."

Debra was answering the question, "Who are Filipinos?" before the man who has dipped the Philippines in his TV coverage of Star Trek Asian food scene (and widely respected New York-based food critic Anthony Bourdain).

Bourdain shared his Chinese and Korean friends in the States know so much more about their culture and language than him. In this confusion, he also went to say that he is one of those Americans here Filipinos who cannot speak and, in some ways, understand Filipino, growling that their parents didn't bother to teach them.

The young Filipino-Americans do speak, though. With little knowledge about his country, an observation shared by Bourdain, Debra answered when he asked Filipino, government official or public figure, his dream: "Bring (people to our country) which, upon the leader's perspective mind, only encouraged him to take a broader cultural theme, one that involved Debra's Indigeneity idea."

Bourdain would have some upside tricky question after another: a hard to do: "Why don't we have Filipino food represented in the States as much as other Asian?"

Debra's response: a period of adjustment is coming. There is the first stage called acculturation, a stage when he first arrives in America and adjusts himself to the culture. This is not a problem for Filipinos. There is the second stage where he understands, and becomes part of the culture and way of life here. A drawback that is impossible for other cultures, as may one for Filipinos. Then there are first-generation parents who has ingrained in their American-born children that adhering to the American way of life would be better for them in the long haul.

Continue to indulge. It's on us!
